Taco Bell hires security to handle late-night rowdies

By Elayne S. Takemoto
Staff Writer

A polite young man stood at the well-scrubbed counter. He was smiling. His baseball cap was slightly crooked so that one of the enormous stuffed antlers that protruded from the sides of his head almost touched his shoulder.

"Welcome to Taco Bell," he said. "May I take your order?"

The staff at Taco Bell is friendly. The atmosphere is clean. And as part of a promotional campaign, you even can win a stuffed "Rocky and Bullwinkle" hat like the one described above.

But despite these pleasantries, the fast-food eatery at Santa Rosa and Olive streets has had more than its share of public disturbances.

Open until 3 a.m. Wednesday through Saturday, and until 2 a.m. Sunday through Tuesday, Taco Bell is one of the few late-night places to eat in the downtown area. This makes it a prime target for tipsy young people who are out celebrating the weekend.

"We get a lot of college kids (in the restaurant)," said restaurant manager Corey Rush. "Then we pick up the bar rush and all the late night people that are partying."

With Friday and Saturday nights being the two busiest times of the week, the small restaurant is often clogged with customers.

"We've found that over the years when we get a big buildup of people, they tend to want to fight," Rush said.

To curb this tendency, the restaurant hired a security guard and increased its number

Chute is culprit in Paso deaths

Probe finds rigging was faulty

By Marla R. Van Schuyver
Senior Staff Writer

An incorrectly-rigged tandem parachute is being blamed for the March 21 accident that took the lives of a Cal Poly student and a well-known Paso Robles parachuting instructor.

Mechanical engineering senior Stephen King, 23, and Albert Stephens, 46, of the Sky Dive Paso Robles parachuting school, were killed when their parachutes did not open during a tandem jump. The two men fell nearly two miles to their deaths.

Two parachute experts inspected the rigging on the parachutes intended for use during the afternoon jump.

T.K. Donle of Relative Workshop in Deland, Fla., and Allen Silver of Silver Parachute Rigging in Hayward, concluded in a 10-page report that the main parachute was improperly rigged and that Stephens should have caught the error.

"The three ring drogue release was improperly rigged," a report from the experts states.

"This defect in the rigging of the parachute completely disabled the main parachute. ... Even with the tandem parachute being disabled, barring a medical emergency or incapacitation of Mr. Stephens, emergency actions should have been taken to deploy the reserve parachute and were not."

A second, emergency parachute appeared to have been properly packed and could have been used, the report said.

"We still don't know why the second parachute was not opened," said Paso Robles Detective Clint Wenter. "There could have been some altitude disorientation — meaning that (Stephens) failed to realize that he was out of time."

"Unfortunately, when this kind of accident happens, there isn't any way to do an autopsy to see if there was heart failure or anything else that may have contributed."

The parachuting experts said they have not ruled out the possibility that Stephens may have had heart failure or a stroke which could have prevented him from following through with the use of the emergency second parachute.

Stephens was recently certified in Florida for tandem jump instruction, police said. He had jumped more than 1,400 times before the fatal jump.

The jump was a first for King.

Suspected rapist's mother alleges discrepancies in long police report

By Gabe Joynt
Staff Writer

Michael Simon will go to court today to face charges that he attacked three women near campus fall quarter.

But Simon's mother insists police have the wrong man — and is pointing to what she calls discrepancies in a lengthy arrest report to support her claim.

"I think the police don't have anybody," Simon's mother, Susan Obregon, said. "They're being pressured into finding someone."

Police believe Simon raped a Cal Poly student in the Stenner Glen parking lot. Police also suspect he attempted to rape both another Cal Poly student and a Cuesta College student in the Cal Poly area during fall quarter. Police have ceased searching for other suspects and have declined further comment on the case.

Cal Poly Public Safety officials believe Simon is also the perpetrator of an attack on a Cal Poly student in her Sierra Madre dorm room during fall quarter. Though the victim identified Simon as her assailant through a photo lineup, police have yet to charge him, according to investigator Ray Berrett. Berrett declined to speak further about the case.

In today's 9:30 a.m. preliminary hearing, Simon will be represented by public defender Richard Phelan. Prosecutors at the hearing will likely present several pieces of evidence which they allege tie Simon to the crimes.

Students arrested for campus scooter theft

By Matthew Hoy
Staff Writer

Public Safety arrested two Cal Poly students early Sunday morning after they attempted to steal a three-wheeled Cushman scooter, police said.

Victor Hernandez, a business senior, and Patrick Henningsen, an art senior, were arrested at 2:55 a.m. Sunday and charged with vehicle theft, according to Public Safety Investigator Mike Kennedy.

Hernandez also has been charged with lying to a police officer after giving the arresting officers a false name, Kennedy said.

The scooter is used by Development Services to transport mail. It is normally parked behind Heron Hall.

According to police, the suspects said they had been walking around campus when they saw the scooter.

Both suspects had been drinking, Kennedy said.

The suspects told police they coasted the scooter down the hill and were attempting to gain momentum to push it back up.

The scooter had been moved approximately 500 feet.

Both students were booked into San Luis Obispo County Jail with bail set at $4,000.

Senate Ethics Committee starts probe of Orrin Hatch

Washington, D.C.

The Senate Ethics Committee opened a preliminary inquiry yesterday into contacts between the office of Senator Orrin G. Hatch, R-Utah, and representatives of the Bank of Credit and Commerce International.

Committee co-chairmen Richard Bryan, D-Nev., and Mitch McConnell, R-Ky., said Hatch had requested in writing that the committee investigate his office's contact with representative of BCCI — the discredited bank that was closed down after accusations of money laundering, racketeering and other criminal activities.

Hatch, a three-term senator, "has provided the committee with office records and documents," said a committee statement released jointly by Bryan and McConnell.

Hatch acknowledged that he once called BCCI's chief executive in London to ask him to consider lending money to a Houston developer who is a friend of Hatch's.

Hatch strongly defended BCCI in a speech on the Senate floor in 1990 and has said he once asked the outlaw bank for a loan to a friend.

A report released last fall by the Senate Foreign Relations subcommittee on terrorism outlined meetings that former Hatch aide Michael Pillsbury had with government officials and BCCI lawyers. It made no mention of Hatch.

Hatch had previously disclosed that he had asked the Senate Ethics Committee to investigate possible improper contacts between Pillsbury and BCCI officials.

In 1991, Hatch acknowledged that he once called BCCI's chief executive in London to ask him to consider lending money to a Houston developer who is a friend of Hatch's. The developer, Monzer Hourani, has contributed money to Hatch's campaigns and was involved in a real estate deal with him.

BCCI never made the requested loan, Hatch has said.

In a separate matter, the committee concluded that it would take no action on complaints of sexual misconduct by Senator Daniel Inouye, D-Hawaii, who has insisted upon his innocence. The committee said it was dropping the case against Inouye, a six-term senator, because witnesses would not cooperate.

A hairdresser accused Inouye of sexually assaulting her 17 years ago, and a Hawaii state legislator said women called her with stories of other sexual misconduct by Inouye.

Financial aid changes confusing students, staff

By Todd Hogan
Staff Writer

New rules can be 'chaotic' for some recipients

Changes in financial aid eligibility requirements — combined with substantially higher fees anticipated for next year — have many students asking questions and the Financial Aid Office reeling for answers.

"I've worked in financial aid for 17 years and I've never seen the chaos we're dealing with now," said Diane Ryan, director of Cal Poly's Financial Aid Office. "This is a very volatile year."

At the beginning of spring quarter, Ryan issued a memorandum to all current financial aid recipients outlining several issues which may impact financial aid awards for next year.

For one, the basis upon which financial aid need was calculated in the past has changed significantly, and many students will not demonstrate the same level of need they did this year, Ryan said.

Some of those changes include:

- All students under 24 years of age are now considered, for financial aid purposes, dependent students. This could seriously affect the Pell Grant eligibility for many students because financial need calculations are based on "expected family contribution" — a combination of the students' and the parents' incomes.

- To help counter the "dependent" status, home equity — or the value of a family's property — is no longer used in calculating the expected family contribution for a student. This is significant, Ryan said, because many families may have money tied up in property or holdings, but have little available in liquid assets to help students.

- And to make up the difference in lost Pell Grant eligibility, Financial Aid will be offering a number of different loan programs designed to subsidize students' unmet financial need.

"We're doing the best we can to make sure everyone who needs aid gets it," Ryan said. "Students need to be patient until we get all the numbers worked out."

An additional dilemma for students and the Financial Aid Office alike is an increase in fees expected for next year and the lack of exact figures to work with.

Current costs for the academic year are estimated by the Financial Aid Office at about $9,500, which includes a tentative fee/tuition charge of about $2,200. That's up from about $1,700 a year now charged, Ryan said.

But until the proposed fees/tuition charges are finalized, Ryan said, the amount of the Cal Grants and State University Grants are "up in the air."

Lastly, the preliminary financial aid award notices, usually mailed to students in May, will likely be delayed, Ryan said.

"We are trying to implement the required changes as quickly as possible," Ryan said. "But it is highly likely that we will not have all the aid awards out before the end of spring quarter."

Though the Financial Aid Office is shooting to have the award notices mailed by the first week of June, Ryan recommends students expecting an award update their permanent address at the Records Office.

Students await King verdict

National Guard members 'on call' in case of civil unrest

By Nicole Medgin
Staff Writer

Curiosity, fear and apprehension are circulating throughout the state in anticipation of the verdict in the Rodney King beating trial.

And those feelings are even more intense for two Cal Poly students.

Tim Vincent, in the California Army National Guard, and Michelle Van Der Linden, in the California Air National Guard, are anxiously awaiting the jury's decision.

Their units have been notified to be "on call." Both students must respond to their units in Ventura within six hours if needed, following the statement of the verdict.

Vincent, a journalism senior, said he doesn't think there will be a situation as "intense as last year."

"It is obvious that everyone is organized and will work together to stop any looting and beating," he said.

Van Der Linden, also a journalism student, said "a lot of people are really skeptical of what is going to happen. I hope it's not necessary for us to go down there, but I'm ready if I have to."

If their units are called to respond to a situation, they will be assigned a certain area to guard and they are to "secure" that area or building.

"Last year we were assigned the General Telephone building in Compton," Van Der Linden said. "It is the main communication building to L.A. there. We just got on the rooftops and watched the city while we guarded."

During last year's riot, Vincent was in Los Angeles for 16 days.

"The citizens on the street were what made being there bearable," he said. "They would come up to us and say 'Thank you' and give us a Coke. The people were great."

SHERRY GURTNER/Mustang Daily

Tim Vincent and Michelle Van Der Linden await word on a verdict.

Van Der Linden said she was alarmed at the extent of unrest during her stint in L.A.

"I was totally shocked and bewildered, more than I was scared," she said. "I couldn't believe humans could do this to other humans."

Being a student also adds to the pressure and confusion, Vincent said.

"I missed a lot of school last year," he said. "But my instructors are all pretty understanding. I gave them all notice this year. My fraternity brothers are also really supportive, and if I need to be in L.A. again this year, they promise to help me out by picking up homework for me."

IN YOUR OPINION...

TOPIC:

This week, students were asked their opinion as to whether engineering technology's fate should be reconsidered on the basis of the recommendation of the review committee.

I've always had my feelings on (the subject). This is a polytechnic school -- it would be ridiculous to kick out a technical major.

I'm not too sure (the committee's findings will bring ET back). It seems like every page in the paper is talking about budget cuts -- they had to cut something.

-- Emily Ironi
Political Science

I think they should keep it if there are enough students to keep it open.

You think they would have put a little bit more research into (the decision) in the first place.

The committee's report seems like it would be enough (of a basis) for ET to (be brought back).

-- Scott Cimino
Ag Business

There must be a reason why the committee said they should stay, so it seems like it should be looked into more.

They're trying to cut so many areas, that one's kind of already on its way. I don't think they're going to go back and say, okay, you can stay. Especially when there's more cuts to come.

-- Michelle Boyd
Liberal Studies

I think it should stay. It is a polytechnic school.

I think the school is kind of desperate and they're just doing anything they can without thinking about the students. I think the students are coming last in this.

I think (ET) is already lost. I think it's best for them to go look for another school because I don't think this school is going to care too much about what the students think.

COMMENTARY

The fall of Rome

By Jason Crotty

Justice Byron White's recent retirement gives President Bill Clinton an early opportunity to change the direction of the Supreme Court. Reagan's four appointments and Bush's two have shifted the law to the right. The Court, led by Chief Justice William Rehnquist, has rolled back many of the innovative rulings of the liberal Warren Court; Clinton, however, has a chance to halt the rightward movement, as he will become the first Democrat since Lyndon Johnson to name a justice. As the final interpreter of the Constitution, the Court has a profound influence on issues such as abortion, affirmative action, church-state relations, and the rights of the accused.

Appointing justices to the Court is one of a president's most significant and lasting powers, a fact not lost on Clinton, a former law professor and a graduate of Yale Law School. Supreme Court justices often serve far beyond the term of the president who appoints them, thereby continuing that president's legacy. John Marshall, for example, served 34 years; William O. Douglas, 36 years; and William Brennan 33 years. Abraham Lincoln's last justice retired 32 years after his assassination. The mere fact that Clinton will be replacing White, an appointment of John F. Kennedy, testifies to the fact that Court appointments have significant longevity.

White's retirement ends a career that included the unlikely combination of being a Rhodes Scholar at Oxford and an NFL running-back. In fact, he graduated Magna cum laude from Yale Law School while simultaneously playing for the Detroit Lions.

Despite the fact that White was appointed by a Democrat, he has frequently sided with the Court's conservatives on many of the most divisive issues. White dissented in the landmark 1973 abortion case of Roe v. Wade and has upheld state limitations on abortion ever since. He has maintained a narrow definition of the right to privacy, writing the opinion in a 1986 case refusing to include homosexual sodomy within privacy rights. He dissented from several landmark criminal cases, including Miranda v. Arizona, which gave birth to the famous Miranda warnings. White has generally been sympathetic to the police in criminal matters. He has also provided the swing vote for both sides in a number of affirmative action cases. A number of these cases were decided by narrow 5-4 margins, just one vote from 5-4 the other way.

Clinton's replacement of Byron White may be his most important appointment, as other justices considered likely to retire soon, Harry Blackmun and John Paul Stevens, are consistent liberal votes. Replacing them with younger liberals would not significantly alter the balance of the Court.

The country is not well served by mediocre minds on the Supreme Court.

White, on the other hand, has often voted with the conservative Reagan/Bush appointees, and his replacement may have an immediate impact. For example, if Clinton names a moderate liberal capable of gaining the votes of moderates Sandra Day O'Connor, Anthony Kennedy, and David Souter, that justice could make a significant difference.

However, if Clinton nominates an extreme liberal with an agenda to move the Court dramatically to the left, those moderates would probably not go along. That justice risks being a relatively ineffectual and lonely dissenter, much like Rehnquist was on the right from 1971 until 1986 when he was elevated to Chief Justice. Nevertheless, whoever succeeds White will join a Court dominated by conservatives.

Clinton also has a chance to reverse the embarrassing spectacle that has tainted several recent Court appointments. The nominations of Robert Bork in 1987 and Clarence Thomas in 1991 demonstrate that the current confirmation process is severely flawed. Senators have abandoned their historic role of primarily judging qualifications and moral fitness in favor of political confirmations based on ideology.

Senators now attempt to determine precisely how a nominee plans to vote on certain issues, especially abortion. Interest groups now undertake substantial campaigns for or against nominees viewed as favorable to their particular positions. This trend has turned the Court into another political branch, the center of massive lobbying campaigns despite constitutional intentions that it not be.

Justices were endowed with life tenure precisely to insulate them from such influences. Moreover, this political confirmation reduces the independence of the Supreme Court by making it a political, not a legal body. As a result, the last few nominees have been obscure judges who have said and written little. In addition, the quality has apparently declined. Clarence Thomas, for example, had few qualifications other than being conservative and black. The last appointee with outstanding legal and intellectual qualifications was the rejected Robert Bork. The last actually confirmed was Antonin Scalia in 1986. The country is not well served by mediocre minds on the Supreme Court.

Bill Clinton should nominate an individual he feels represents his legal philosophy. The nominee should also be supremely qualified; with no Democratic appointees in 25 years, it stands to reason that there are a number of outstanding candidates. Unlike his unseemly capitulation to women's groups in the selection of an Attorney General, the search should center on qualifications regardless of race or gender. With Democrats in control of the Senate, Clinton should have little trouble getting a prominent candidate confirmed. Senators, both Republican and Democrat, should not question the nominee on particular legal questions or attempt to elicit how the nominee will vote. Given the importance of Supreme Court appointments, the public should be aware of the proceedings and recognize the significance of naming a justice.

Jason Crotty is a political science senior at Cal Poly.

EDITORIAL

The decision-making process

Decisions on pertinent issues are usually carefully considered before being implemented.

Most would include argumentation and discussion as parts of this process. And as far as most can tell, this is the kind of process that went into the decision to eliminate the major of engineering technology.

Sort of.

With the announcement of the findings of a discontinuance committee in Monday's Daily, the decision making process seems to have come full circle. In reverse.

What began with President Baker's executive decision to eliminate ET ended with the committee's recommendation that it remain as a staple of Cal Poly's educational curriculum. This chain of events runs counter not only to the feelings of the students and faculty involved with ET, to but most well-established principles of logic, as well.

Adding insult to injury to this scenario is the fact that the premature decision is the choice that will prevail. No amount of committee reports or justifying evidence is likely to bring ET back to Cal Poly any time soon, if at all.

According to ET department head Kim Davis, the committee was told that "no matter what the (investigation's) outcome, ET would be discontinued and defunded."

One has to question why the committee was formed at all in light of the circumstances they were forced to work under — an outcome with no real meaning trying to reverse a decision already set in motion.

Regardless of whether ET should stay or not, this decision was a poor one based solely upon the procedure followed to implement it.

In the future, it probably would benefit all parties involved if debates concerning aspects of this campus were argued before being decided upon.

Hopefully, a decision on this hasn't already been made.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Impeding elements

The heaviest element known to science was recently discovered by university physicists. The element, tentatively named "ADMINISTRATIUM," has no proton or electrons and thus has an atomic weight of 0; however, it does have one neutron, 70 vice neutrons and 161 assistant-vice neutrons. This gives it an atomic mass of 232. These 232 particles are held together in a nucleus by a force that involves the continuous exchange of meson-like particles called morons.

Since it has no electron, Administratium is inert; however, it can be detected chemically, as it impedes every reaction it comes in contact with. According to researchers, a minute amount of Administratium, added to one reaction, caused it to take four days to complete. Without the Administratium, the reaction ordinarily occurred in less than one second.

Administratium has a normal half-life of approximately three years, at which time it does not actually decay but instead undergoes a reorganization in which assistant-vice neutrons exchange places. Studies seem to show the atomic number actually increasing after each reorganization.

Research indicates that Administratium occurs naturally in the atmosphere. It tends to concentrate in certain locations such as government agencies, large corporations and universities. It can usually be found in the newest, best-appointed and best-maintained buildings.

Scientists warn that Administratium is known to be toxic, and recommend plenty of fluids and bed rest after even low levels of exposure.

SIMON

tempted assault. The belt was a specialized medical belt used at Casa de Vida, a San Luis Obispo home for developmentally disabled adults. A police report said Simon worked there for approximately one week last fall.

According to Obregon, Simon, 23, has been in and out of jail for nearly half his life. He was first arrested when he was 12-years-old for stealing three dollars in pennies, Obregon said. Simon spent many of his teenage years in custody and earned a Graduate Equivalency Diploma.

"Since Michael was a burglar at a young age, the state of California has been his parents," Obregon said.

Simon gave himself the nickname "Street," Obregon said, because once he gets out of jail, he's never on the street for long.

Because of his criminal record, police are quick to point the finger of blame at him, Obregon said.

Obregon said every time a burglary takes place in San Luis Obispo, police come looking for Simon.

"They just want him out of here; the farther away, the better," she said.

"I'm not blind to him, I'm not ignorant," Obregon said from her San Luis Obispo home. "But not every crime in San Luis Obispo is (committed by) Michael."

Obregon said there isn't anything in Simon's past involving any kind of violence or sexual offenses.

"Michael's not violent. He's a show-off, he's a rapper," Obregon said. She described her son as "silly," and said he's never been involved in any violent crime.

Obregon said the police have "no case" and "absolutely no physical evidence" linking Simon to the attacks.

According to police reports, Simon was identified as the attacker by two of the victims and other witnesses through a photo lineup.

"Police want it to be him. They're patting themselves on the back, saying, 'Oh good, we caught the rapist,'" Obregon said. "If Michael is the one who's doing this, how come it's still happening?"

Two rapes have been reported since Simon was taken into custody on a parole hold in January. The first attack happened on Feb. 3 on the Cal Poly campus, and the second on Feb. 28 at Laguna Middle school in San Luis Obispo.

The attacker in the second incident was described as a white male, aged 18-20, approximately 5'8" tall, with brown hair, according to San Luis Obispo Police Detective Isabel Funaro.

Although the assailant's physical characteristics and the attack description seem similar to those of the Stenner Glen incident of which Simon is accused, Funaro said the two are completely unrelated.

Funaro would not discuss the Simon case, but said evidence as yet undisclosed will link Simon to the crimes of which he is accused.

According to police reports, the suspect in the two attacks in November was described as having long fingernails, a strong body odor and dark hair. Both victims said the perpetrator could have been a transient.

Obregon cites these descriptions as a reason why Simon could not be responsible for these attacks.

She said Simon has always been "immaculate" about his personal hygiene, and said the victims could not have mistaken his red hair for brown or black. Obregon also said Simon has always bitten his fingernails down to the cuticles, and once even had to seek medical attention as a result.

TACO BELL

of employees to quickly serve the customers and send them on their way. Originally hired as added protection during last year's Public Enemy concert at Cal Poly, the security has been an effective method for taming the hungry crowd.

"We mostly keep people from loitering in the parking lot or the store," said security guard David Faset.

"We keep people from being real wild, rude and throwing food. There are so many people that are drunk, they want us to keep it under control."

Faset called the brawl that broke out on April 2 — when a different guard tried to prevent a 21-year-old from stealing a sign — a "freak deal." One San Luis Obispo man was arrested and two were cited in the fight that involved 15 to 20 people.

Watch Commander Jerry Lenthall of the San Luis Obispo Police Department attributes the problems at Taco Bell to "intoxicated young people aged 16 to 24."

Those young troublemakers don't come from Cal Poly, the restaurant's assistant manager, Todd Owen, argues.

"Most of the problems we have aren't Poly students," he said. Owen, an electrical engineering senior at Cal Poly, works five late-night shifts per week.

"Mainly the ones we get problems from are high school-aged students and people from Santa Maria/Oceano that come up to be with their friends," he said. "If they're really inclined to fight then it's going to happen."

Although college students do comprise a large portion of the late-night clientele, employee Michelle Curran, 21, has a successful method for dealing with disoriented patrons.

"Every once in a while you get a customer that's really drunk and they don't know what they've ordered," she said. "They're a little lost so you help them through it and send them on their way."

THOUGHT of the DAY...

In America, we tax work, investment, employment, savings and productivity, while we subsidize non-work, consumption and debt. It's time we start to reverse this trend.
